Beyond Academics: Social and Emotional Needs of the Gifted Students

Is the gifted child different from other children?
Social development, emotional maturity, friends, peers, introvert/extrovert, and more

The gifted child's asynchronous development is not just academic. Their needs are not so different: gifted kids need to be accepted for who and what they are, and to have the same social/emotional experiences as other kids. How can we accomplish this, both at home and in school?

Presenter: Carolyn Kottmeyer is the founder and director of Hoagies' Gifted Education Page. She is a software engineer by training and trade, with bachelor's and master's degrees in software engineering. She developed an interest in gifted education a few years after the birth of her first child, when she noticed how different her daughter was and how the "normal" path through education didn't suit her. Since 1998, Carolyn has been writing and speaking on gifted topics around the U.S. and the world
